The Holy City
Miss Mattie Lou Catron, director of the voice department of Central college, has organized a chorus of fifty voices from the college and town for the purpose of giving the oratorio, The Holy City, by A. R. Gaul. The time set for the event is Tuesday, March 16, and the place Murrell auditorium.
This production should bring forth a large audience, as never before have the people of Lexington had an opportunity of hearing a complete oratorio. Several cantatas have been given with complete success and three years ago a chorus under the direction of Signor D'Anna gave parts of Spohr's Last Judgment. In giving the Holy City, however, the chorus will present the oratorio in its unified entirety.
Solo parts will be taken by Miss Forsythe, Miss Palmer, Mr. Baltz and Dr. Banta, all of Kansas City. An orchestra will play the accompaniments.

The Cause of Many Sudden Deaths.

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney-poisoned blood will attack the vital organs, causing catarrh of the bladder, brick-dust or sediment in the urine, head ache, back ache, lame back, dizziness, sleeplessness, nervousness, or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away cell by cell.
Bladder troubles almost always result from a derangement of the kidneys and better health in that organ is obtained quickest by a proper treatment of the kidneys. Swamp-Root corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often through the day and to get up many times during the night. The mild and immediate effect of Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy is soon realized. It stands the highest because of its remarkable health restoring properties. A trial will convince anyone.
Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and is sold by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles. You may have a sample bottle and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address, Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, and don't let a dealer sell you something in place of Swamp-Root—if you do you will be disappointed.

When His Memory Failed
By H. Tipton Steck.
(Copyright, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)
"Did you get me those new socks today, Mabel?" grunted Jones, as he scraped the last bit of lather from his smarting countenance, hastily applied a cooling lotion, and removed his slippers.
"Oh, pshaw! I forgot them, dear. Really, I had so many things to get, and so little time that I—"
"Forget them! That's it! Always when I am concerned, you forget. I'll feel very comfortable at the show tonight, won't I?" and Jones scowled at the darned socks on either foot.
"I'm very sorry, dear," replied his wife from the next room.
"Lot of good that does. It's a funny thing you can always remember a new hat, new gloves, new shoes—something for yourself—and then when I want some socks, I can either get them myself or go without. You want to go to the show tonight so bad—what if I had forgotten to procure tickets, eh? What if I forgot any of the hundred things you are eternally clamoring for? I would get a nice jawing, and be sarcastically complimented on having sawdust for brains. Then, when I want a simple pair of socks—rubbish!"
How Jones managed to dress that evening for the opera has been a source of puzzle to him ever since. That measly little shirt-button persisted in hiding under various pieces of furniture, until his supply of choice profanity was exhausted, and his temper a raging volcano. He couldn't find his cuff-links; a ten-minute search brought to light one collar fairly tidy, and his tie stubbornly refused to form itself into a neat bow, until wifery—summoned by a clarion call—came to his rescue.
Altogether, it was a very hot and wrathful Jones, who, dabbling a bit of cologne about his person, surveyed himself in the glass, and demanded to know if Mrs. Jones would take all evening to get ready.
"In a moment, dear. Don't forget the tickets."
"You needn't give yourself any concern on that score whatever," reached her to follow.
He was standing in the middle of the floor, gazing idiotically at the dresser.
On it—just where he had left them—lay the missing tickets and roll of bills!
Was it any wonder that Mrs. Jones swept majestically from the room, and banged the door after her?

"You needn't give yourself any concern on that score whatever," reached her to follow.
He was standing in the middle of the floor, gazing idiotically at the dresser.
On it—just where he had left them—lay the missing tickets and roll of bills!
Was it any wonder that Mrs. Jones swept majestically from the room, and banged the door after her?

He Clutched Wildly for His Bank Roll.

ing for a cigar and glancing at the pasteboards and roll of bills lying on the dresser. "My memory is not in the least affected," with distinct emphasis on the possessive pronoun.
Mrs. Jones quickly noticed the insinuation, but wisely held her peace. She knew him well—better than he knew himself—and on several occasions his mental lapses had produced complications embarrassing in the extreme, but his capacity for self-amputation was limitless. Therefore, after a hasty dab of powder, she quietly pronounced her readiness, and Jones snapped off the lights.
The theater reached, his ruffled temper was again aggravated by a seedy fellow who was trying to force his way through the jam, and who seemed to take particular pains to crowd poor Jones. Jones lost no time in telling him his opinion of public nuisances in general, but the rude one advised him to "hire a hall," and promptly disappeared in the crush, at which he swore softly, and felt for the tickets.
They were gone!
He clutched wildly for his bank roll.

Gone!
With horrible thoughts of pickpockets chasing rampant through his disordered brain, he hurried Mrs. Jones into a nearby drug store, gasped out his troubles, cautioned her to wait for him—he would soon find the wretched—and regained the street, his head in a whirl.
Here was a nice mess. Four dollars' worth of tickets and 15 other cold plunks lifted from his person with an ease that was positively uncanny. He could see it all now; the seedy-looking fellow, the intentional crowding, and to crown it all, the monumental gall displayed in advising him—John Waltham Jones—to do such a vulgar thing as "hire a hall," the very thought of which brought his blood again to the boiling point.
The odor of rank cooking, together with a strange feeling of uneasiness, caused him to glance up hastily. He was in front of a dingy restaurant—one of those alluring places whose chief source of income depends on the sale of "slinkers and coffee."
But what forced an irrepressible cry of joy from his lips was a sight of the lone customer, perched on one of the stools at the counter, contentedly munching away on a huge bun clutched in his left hand, while the right vigorously stirred a cup of steaming "boot-legs," and who, but a short time before, had so handsily relieved him of tickets and bank roll.

Controlling a desire to haul the thief from his meal and administer a sound drubbing, Jones raced to the corner, found an officer, and excitedly told his story.

"And yet say he's in Foley's place blowin' himself to a feed?" questioned the guardian of the peace, looking suspiciously at the immaculate figure before him.
"Yes, in that little restaurant down there. We can nab him with the goods, if we hurry."

Jones was eloquent in his appeal, as the thought of the fellow stuffing himself at his (Jones') expense, was gall and wormwood.
The patrolman, convinced that things were all right, acted quickly; Foley's was invaded, and the prisoner, protesting his innocence at every step, was hustled off to the station.

Jones went over his story again to the sergeant, dilating on the details until the outlook was indeed black for the unfortunate, who had given the name of Marshall. A thorough search, however, failed to bring forth either tickets or money, and Jones was furious.

"Sergeant," he stormed, "he's had a confederate near by, and—"

"Yer another!" broke in Marshall. "I never lifted yer wad, an' you know it. Just such fresh guys—"

"Silence!" exclaimed the sergeant. "Look him up, officer." Then to Jones: "Be on hand in the morning to appear."

He promised and left the station. "You bet I'll appear against him," Jones was saying later to his wife, as he snapped on the electric. "Why not?"

"Oh, it's such a bother, and, besides, are you positive he took them?"

"Positive! Certainly I'm positive! Where else could they have gone to?"

"Well, you might have forgotten them, or else—"

"Rubbish!" snorted Jones, and disappeared into his room.

A rather lurid exclamation caused her to follow.

He was standing in the middle of the floor, gazing idiotically at the dresser.

On it—just where he had left them—lay the missing tickets and roll of bills!

Was it any wonder that Mrs. Jones swept majestically from the room, and banged the door after her?

THE DANCE IN MONTANA.

Description of Scene of Joy Makes One Long to Have Been There.

There was sure something doing at the Silver Tip schoolhouse Saturday night. At eight o'clock the building was dark and gloomy and the floor was covered with everything from chalk to pieces of sage brush and coal, but behold the transformation which had taken place in less than an hour.

Three men with brooms swept the floor; then for good measure the women swept it again. Somebody brought a stove; some one else arranged boards for seats. Still another sprinkled wax on the floor about an inch deep, and then the music started; also the fun. Twenty-five couples were on the floor at ten o'clock. They were still there dancing like mad until midnight—and then some.

A boiler of coffee was made. No one knows who made it, but we will let that pass. Of course, one thoughtful person drove a cow up to the door, so there was plenty of milk. A peck measure contained sugar and for spoons you could take your choice of using your finger or shaking the contents of the tin cup around until the ingredients were well mixed.

And then those ham sandwiches! Tied up in tissue paper with red ribbons. Some were so hungry for the atrocious hours of the early evening that they ate the sandwiches without removing either the ribbon or paper.
But the dance went on. Was there ever such a time before? Old-fashioned quadrilles were mixed in with waltzes and two-steps, and for good measure firs were thrown in. The old schoolhouse may have seen its best days as far as "learning" is concerned, but it is a pretty good dance hall in a pinch right now.

Time up the fiddle; put more rosin on the bow and let her go. Wow!—Carbon County News.

New Deity in Africa.

Ekokombi, calling himself a deity, has appeared among the Congolese of the Mongo and Ngombe and created great excitement. He has issued a command that all charms and fetiches be destroyed or otherwise got rid of, and if in his course any are found still in possession of these they will be tortured or killed by some of his messengers. This has taken such a hold on the minds of the people all over the interior that strong as is their belief in the potency of their charms, they have in most cases destroyed them.

Electricity in Japan.

The authorized capital of Japanese electric undertakings in 1903, $14,193,000, rose to $68,724,000 in 1907. The electrical works undertaken chiefly represented lighting and railways. The number of lights supplied in 1903, 365,000, increased in 1907 to 859,143. Tokyo and Osaka require each 100,000 lights. Electric railways show equal development. In 1903 the mileage was 28, which rose to 119 in 1907, and will be largely added to by construction during the present year.
